The Madness of Lady Bright

Directed by Jen Sloan

Cast:

Leslie- David Kelly

Boy- Molly Beckett

Girl- Marti Skoler

Setting:

Present with various recollections of the past, Leslie's apartment, New York City

Director's Note:

Through the process we have explored the extent of isolation and found the impact of loneliness is both universal and timeless. No matter who or where you are, extended periods of solitude create barriers between reality and nostalgic delusion. Traditionally, The Madness of Lady Bright is performed with a male playing the Boy; however, to achieve a more universal affect of isolation, I decided to cast a female to play the boy because I felt the sense of exaggerated masculinity wasn't jeopardized and was able to connect it to issues of loneliness transgender people face today.

Director's Note:

"Man is asleep. Man does not have real consciousness or will at all. Man is not free. For man, everything just happens. However, man can become conscious and find man's real place, as a human being, in creation but this requires a profound inner transformation."

-George Gurdjieff
